ABSTRACT

This study conducted to explore the influence of mobile payment on daily activities in physical stores. With the prevalence of mobile devices in today's society, many individuals are opting to carry their mobile devices instead of physical cash. This phenomenon has sparked the interest of researchers, leading to the development of this study. The main objective is to investigate the relationship between variables and determine the most influential dimension that affects adults and teenagers regarding mobile payment. The methodology employed in this study involved a survey of 321 respondents from Palembang, Indonesia. The collected data was analyzed using reliability, correlation, and multiple regression techniques. The findings indicate that perceived trust and deal proneness significantly impact the interest to adopt mobile payment, whereas perceived convenience does not show a significant effect. It should be noted that this study has limitations, as it focuses on a specific area in Indonesia and targets adults and teenagers who may have time constraints due to work or school commitments. Nonetheless, this study contributes to understanding the lack of impact of mobile payments on daily activities and fills a gap in the existing literature.

Keywords: Mobile Payment, Perceived Trust, Deal Proneness, Perceived Convenience..

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

I express my sincere gratitude to all individuals who have provided invaluable assistance, support, motivation, and active participation throughout this research program. I would like to extend my first and foremost appreciation to our esteemed lecturer, Dr. Jaizah Binti Othman, and Ms. Siti Khadijah Saleh., as well as Mrs. Faridah, for their unwavering encouragement throughout the completion of this thesis. Dr. Jaizah Binti Othman, Ms. Siti Khadijah Saleh, and Dra. Faridah, M.S. have consistently offered their assistance and guidance to students in their research endeavors. I am immensely grateful to my supervisor, Ms. Siti Khadijah Saleh, for her remarkable support, generosity, and guidance, particularly in reviewing and providing feedback on my proposal. I have greatly benefited from her continuous support during research conventions, discussions, and her invaluable guidance throughout the various stages of this study. Lastly, I extend profound appreciation to my family for their unwavering support, and I am grateful to my friends Arga Ammar, Fadly Dody, Thoriq, Obay, Lulung, Agung, Birril, as well as my friend in Indonesia, Ahmad Putra Prawira, Doni, and Akbar, for their assistance. I would also like to acknowledge the help and guidance from all my classmates who have contributed to the completion of this research project, as well as express my gratitude for their support and encouragement.
