CHAPTER V
CONCLUSION AND SUGGESTION

5.1 CONCLUSION

From the explanation in previous chapter, the writer concludes that it is good to use Google translate application as a translated media of the text, In fact, using Google Translate can help us saving our time to translate easier. However, the result of translated materials by using Google Translate are not good enough especially in grammatically. It is can be seen from the errors founded by the writer from the target text translated by using Google translate application. They are lexical error (wrong word choice), syntactic or grammar error (preposition, tenses, article the), semantic error (collocation), and translation-specific error (inconsistency). In addition, to eliminate the weaknesses, the Google translate application user needs to understand grammar and other supporting aspects, such as determining the suitable word to get the appropriate meaning.

5.2 SUGGESTION

There is a suggestion given by the writer. It is better for all Google translate users give an adjustment to the translated text. The users' knowledge plays an important role to get a better quality of the target text. In other words, the users can use Google translate to produce a quick translation, however the users need to edit the text that was translated by Google translate application.