

CHAPTER V

CONCLUSION AND SUGGESTIONS

5.1. Conclusion

The writer concluded that in writing this short story, the writer used three steps of research and development modification: preliminary study, model development, and final product. There are three steps in preliminary study such as literature study, field survey, and model draft. In literature study the writer read some books and journal to find theories which is related to the product, and then in field survey the writer did direct observation in Pasar Kuto, precisely in Warung Aba and Warung H. Madina as the settings of short story. After that, the writer continued to make model draft. In this step the writer started to make the draft that would be develop such as cover, opening word section, the content of short story itself, and author's profile. After preliminary study, the writer continued to model development. In model development, the writer gave the model draft to some expert to be checked and some readers. The writer followed the expert suggestion to change the name of main character and revised the grammar, spelling, and punctuation. The last step is final product, the short story printed into book to accompanied this report and published on wattpad.

Based on the process that has been done, this short story can be used to introduce traditional morning culinary in Palembang because morning culinary is an important part of the plot of this short story. This short story has characters who are shopping for food, eating it and talking about it. So, the readers not only entertained by the short story but also get a lot of information about traditional morning culinary in Palembang.

5.2. Suggestions

Based on the results of writing a short story entitled "But First, Let's Have Breakfast!" that has been done, the writer suggest the Cultural and Tourism

Departement of Palembang city use this short story to promote traditional morning culinary in Palembang to the visitors and tourists. It can make the sellers more motivated to sell Palembang traditional foods if there are so many people that visit their shop to eat the foods.

The writer also would like to give suggestion to the students of English Department of State Polytechnic of Sriwijaya to make more short story about traditional foods in their own city because it can develop their writing skill and at the same time help the government to promote culinary tourism.
